June 2024

Welcome To Paradise!

June is Pride Month all over the country and though Key West is gay all year long, in June we roll out the rainbow carpet and go all out (of the closet!)

This year we're taking it back to the 70s for a Pride you'll never forget!

P

Pride has come to Key West and there is nowhere else I'd rather be! The gayest island in the US AND an epic Pride celebration? Yes, please. If you're joining us for the first time, here is a hint regarding our fair hamlet and where to go and play... but most importantly, where to be fancy!

Down at the Southernmost end of Duval St where the rainbows wave proudly, and the drinks flow freely there is a special place that has been around for seemingly forever. This establishment is known for its inclusive nature, three gorgeous antique style bars, Tea Dance every Sunday with renowned DJ Rude Girl and a timeless female impersonator... Randy Roberts. Randy's home is the incomparable... La Te Da. This is the end of Duval that you'll find me on during Key West's famous Pride week! Likely sitting at the stunning solid wood bar in the courtyard of La Te Da.

The La Te Da hotel has a long and rich history here in Key West. To quote directly from their website, "Originally constructed in 1892 by Teodoro Perez, Key West's premier cigar manufacturer, 1125 Duval St was once home to a thriving cigar factory and residence for workers. Perez was renowned for his advocacy of Cuba Libre (Free Cuba) and played a crucial role in supporting Jose Marti's revolution." La Te Da's motto of "Come As You Are" makes this hotel feel like home the moment you walk through the door and the owners and staff only cement the sentiment when they greet you no matter who you are or where you're from. The owners have transformed this historic gem into a stunning hotel, restaurant and theater all in one while maintaining its charm and charisma that Old Key West is famous for.

One of the most adored features of La Te Da is the second-floor Crystal Room bedecked in long draping curtains, cabaret tables and a top-notch ambiance. Randy Roberts has been performing here as the top female impersonator for over 20 years! There is no lip syncing here! He sings AND transforms himself into famous characters everyone knows like Cher, (perhaps his most famous), Liza, Bette and so many more. When he sings the songs that made each of these women famous, you would absolutely swear that he's the real thing. He will have you laughing at his sharp wit and singing along all while enjoying the glitz and grandeur that this historic hotel is known for.

When the Husbutch and I were first here many years ago we stopped in and saw a show during Pride. What an experience! The audience was filled with lesbian couples holding hands, other queens in drag, trans sisters and brothers and the energy was electric. Randy's shows are always phenomenal but if you're in town for Pride this year, get your tickets early. "Family", as I grew up referring to us, fill the theatre and it is unlike anything you'll experience. If you want to do something during pride that is upscale, glamorous make a full evening of it and reserve seats for dinner before the show in their fabulous restaurant and then go right upstairs!

You can even reserve a room at the hotel and immerse yourself in the vintage style of La Te Da. Wake up to breakfast, walk Duval's more colorful end only steps away, lounge in their pool all afternoon then make a night of it right there with no Uber needed. They have just about everything you could ask for! So if you're like my Husbutch and I and enjoy a detour from the party zone while still vibing your pride in a big way, try La Te Da and take her on a date she'll remember for a long time to come. Lez Go Out and get fancy at La Te Da during Pride. We'll see you in the cabaret for cocktails!

"MEAN BOYS: A PERSONAL HISTORY" BY GEOFFREY MAK

c.2024, Bloomsbury | $28.99 | 267 pages

This and that.

It's how a pleasant conversation is fed, with give and take, back and forth, wandering casually and naturally, a bit of one subject easing into the next with no preamble. It's communication you can enjoy, like what you'll find inside "Mean Boys" by Geoffrey Mak.

Sometimes, a conversation ends up exactly where it started.

Take, for instance, Shakespeare's King Lear, which leads Mak to think about his life and his inability to "cull the appropriate narratives out of nonsense..." Part of that problem, he says, was that his living arrangements weren't consistent. He sometimes "never really knew where I was living," whether it was Berlin or California, in a studio or high-end accommodations. The parties, the jokes, the internet consumption were as varied as the homes and sometimes, "it didn't really matter." Sometimes, you have to accept things and just "move on."

When he was twelve years old, Mak's father left his corporate job, saying that he was "called by God" to become a minister. It created a lot of resentment for Mak, for the lack of respect his father got, and because his parents were "passionately anti-gay..." He moved as far away from home as he could, and he blocked all communication with his parents for years, until he realized that "By hating my father, I ended up hating myself, too..."

And then there was club life which, in Mak's descriptions, doesn't sound much different in Berghain (Germany) as it is in New York. He says he "threw myself into night life," in New York Houses, in places that gave "a skinny Chinese kid from the suburbs... rules I still live by," on random dance floors, and in Pornceptual. Eventually this, drugs, work, politics, pandemic, basically everything and life in general led to a mental crisis, and Mak sought help.

"I don't know why I'm telling you all this," Mak says at one point. "Sometimes life was bad, and sometimes it wasn't, and sometimes it just was."

Though there are times when this book feels like having a heart-to-heart with an interesting new acquaintance, "Mean Boys" can make you squirm. For sure, it's not a beachy-read or something you'll breeze through in a weekend.

No, author Geoffrey Mak jumps from one random topic to another with enough frequency to make you pay super-close to attention to his words, lest you miss something. That won't leave you whiplashed; instead, you're pulled into the often-dissipated melee just enough to feel almost involved with it – but with a distinct sense that you're being held at arms' length, too. That some stories have no definitive timeline or geographical stamp – making it hard to find solid ground – also adds to the slight loss of equilibrium here, like walking on slippery river rock.

Surprisingly, that's not entirely unpleasant but readers will want to know that the ending in "Mean Boys" could leave their heads swirling with a dozen thoughts on life, belonging, and death. If you like depth in your memoirs, you'll like that... and this.

MY BIG GAY LIFE

Brad Loekle

CHILDREN PROBABLY AREN'T THE FUTURE

I was talking with a straight cousin of mine who just had their 5th child. Five. And she got mad at me because I said, “ya know, if you keep having children, I’m going to assume you don’t believe climate change is real.” She was not amused. But, seriously, FIVE more little carbon consumers? I said, “What do you think the end game is for them when we’re all gone and they’re either climate change cannibals or water prostitutes. (By the way, Water Prostitution is something I made up but fully expect to be a thing; as global potable water supplies continue to dwindle and be bought up and hoarded by large corporations.) Do any of us really want to live long enough to see our children and grandchildren sucking dick in a canoe for a capful of Poland Springs?! It doesn’t have to be a canoe, by the way, but I assume alleys will be gone once the ice caps melt so I feel like canoes are a swift, and efficient replacement for when there are no more strip mall dumpsters for practitioners of the world’s oldest profession.

She told me that she always sees children as the hope for tomorrow. That, right now, children are being born who will find ways to solve the problems facing our world. And that’s a nice thought and even fairly logical. But it’s not going to be anyone from our family’s gene jacuzzi?! She and I are descended from long lines of people who were, at their core, just violent potatoes. Some of the only noteworthy branches of our family tree are an Irishman who “may or may not” have killed a British soldier during “The Troubles” and then opened a pub in New York after evading the authorities. Then we have a couple of orphans... always a good sign... for a horror movie. There was a lesbian slum-lord, er, lady. She used to send one of the orphans around to collect the back-rent. Because who is going to tell an Orphan to “fuck off,” right?! Well, it turned out, a lot of people. That orphan is now in their 90s and people are still telling them to fuck off.

In fact, one of the only truly consistent feats within my family tree is that, for the most part, we’re awfully difficult to kill. So, who knows? Maybe it is my family tree we should be watering with that blowjob water. Because we seem to be impervious to drugs, alcohol, radiation exposure, war, famine, and most anti-psychotic medications.

Still, I think I’ll just adopt. It seems like more fun to damage a total stranger than just keep fucking up the carbon copies of ancestral cuckoos who nested in my family tree.

ASK NANA

E-mail your questions to nana@keywestgayrag.com

Dear Nana,

I went on two really nice dates with a guy. Eventually, at some point, I mentioned how I'm not religious or spiritual. Like, at all. And then he called me the next day to tell me he couldn't see me anymore because we'd never be able to be in a serious relationship with someone who didn't believe in some sort of afterlife. Mind you, he'd just broken off a 12 YEAR relationship because he'd never been able to get his partner to believe what he believes. Don't you think he should sort of lead with this info up front? Or am I just over reacting at having my feelings hurt after only two dates?

Sugar bottom, at this point in my life, I'm starting to think dating men is like investing in crypto currency: sure, you hear the occasional success story about someone's co-worker's brother having a lot of success with it...

but for most us we just end up fucked up and poorer from the experience. If this queen has such strong beliefs, he should probably lead with them. It's folly to go on Grindr or out to the bars and just assume you're going to find some cum dump for Christ. Or Buddha bottom. Or whatever it is he's looking for. I wouldn't waste many tears on him if I were you. Beliefs are all fine and good until they fail you. Look at his former partner of 12 years... that poor schmuck might not have believed in an afterlife, but he believed in his current life... with his then partner. And look how THAT turned out?!

Dear Nana,

My sister called me and asked if I could have the "gay sex talk" with my nephew. He's 12 and already out of the closet. I'm the only guncle, and she just feels like the talk would be better from me than from her or her father. This all came up because apparently, he was using shampoo to masturbate in the shower and did it so regularly that he irritated his urethra and had to tell them about it. I'm just nervous to talk about stuff to sort of sexually intense with him because he's 12 and, to me, he's still the little kid I used to take trick or treating on Halloween. What do you think?

I think, at the very least, you sister should discreetly stock up on Johnson & Johnson "no more tears" baby shampoo. At least until you make your mind up! If it were me, I'd talk to the kid. It sounds like you're both close and most kids don't have the benefit of having an in-house homosexual when they're going through puberty. Let him drive the conversation. Don't just buy the kid some lube and gift card to OnlyFans. At 12, he'll probably just want to know the basics about how his body is changing etc. I doubt he's going to ask you for fisting gloves for Christmas. Yet. But, remember, if we don't teach our children... the world will teach them for us. Don't let him grow up thinking everything in porn is real (like so many before him did). Guide him without pushing him. Knowledge is not just power... it's empowerment. And I can't think of anyone who needs personalized empowerment more than one of our own babies as they grow into adulthood.

DO YOU HAVE PROBLEMS? OF COURSE YOU DO! WHY NOT LET NANA HELP YOU?!
